Volunteer Spotlight: Grace Ainge

Grace Ainge, a student at Indiana University, is studying history and decided to volunteer at the museum to learn more about the field and build her skills in research and writing. We spoke with her about what she enjoys about volunteering at the museum and what she hopes to achieve through her experience.

Grace: I've always been interested in history, and volunteering at the museum has been a great way for me to explore my passion and develop my skills. I love the sense of connection I feel with the stories and artifacts I work with, as well as the opportunity to share them with others.

The museum provided me with a unique opportunity to work with the professional volunteers and learn from their expertise. It was also a great way to gain experience in research and writing, which is essential for any career in history or museum work.

I hope to continue volunteering at the museum and see how I can contribute further to the organization.

What advice would you give to someone who is interested in volunteering at the museum? I would recommend that anyone who is interested in history or museum work to consider volunteering at the museum. It is a great opportunity to learn, grow, and contribute to a wonderful organization.
